Our November news should be kind of remedy of our summer arrears. We announced our F-86K Sabre Dog in the summer as our hot news, but as we were not quite happy with quality of some of the model parts, we reworked two of the moulds. So, thanks to this delay, you are now getting much better model of the F-86K plane. But that is not all, besides the F-86K we would like to offer you also a limited re-issue of our Walrus model in the 48th scale. Let's have a look at this model first.

Though Supermarine is famous for its advanced Spitfire fighter design, its main production program from its founding till the end of World War 2 were mostly reliable flying boats of various categories. In the beginning of the 1930s Australia issued Supermarine to design advanced flying boats for maritime patrols and for service on warships. Supermarine replied by Seagull Mk.V design. The RAAF received 24 Seagull Mk.Vs. Subsequent machines featured strengthened structure and thus a new name Walrus Mk.I and were delivered to the Royal Navy that used them on warships catapults as fleet spotters and for reconnaissance missions. When World War 2 broke out, tasks of the Walrus expanded to convoy escorts, air-sea rescue missions (even ASR Squadrons of the RAF used them) and even for bombing missions. Several machines were used also by civilian users. The model we are releasing now is improved over the older one which was produced for Classic Airframes. The fuselage mould has been made completely new. The model contains three sprues of grey plastic parts, injected clear parts, detailed resin parts and a set of photo-etched parts.

SH48164 Walrus Mk.I Post War Foreign Service 1/48.

Production of the famous british seaplane Walrus was stopped as early as 1944, but the built aircraft were exported to two countries after the war. Their destination was Argentina and also the restored French Navy got some of them. In our limited edition of 500pcs you will find decal sheets for both of these two post-war users. There are decals for Argentinian M-O-9 machine which flew in silver dope overal and yellow upper surface of the top-wing. The other option is French machine 53.S.10 with a unit's badge on its bow.

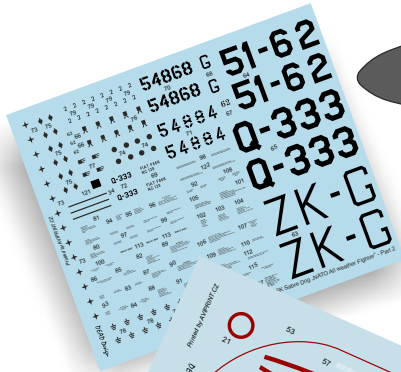

The F-86K Sabre Dog was an all-weather version of the F-86D fighter and was built for European NATO-members. The F-86K had different longer fuselage and cannon armament. Most of the planes had longer span wings identical with that of the following F-86L version. The majority of the planes were built by Fiat in Italy, although few tens of them were built also by North American. The F-86K served in air forces of Italy, the Netherlands, France, Norway and Germany. The model is offered in following boxings:

SH48123 F-86K Sabre Dog “NATO All Weather Fighter” 1/48

Bar Code: 8594071083847

There are three main sprues of grey plastic in this model plus a frame of clear parts, resin parts and a set of photo-etched parts. The decal sheet contains markings for three natural-metal machines, the Italian and Dutch ones have squadron badges on their tails. Most colourful is the Norwegian plane, adorned with a shark mouth and a sketch of a dog named Laika. There is also a plenty of stencils, they are various for all of the three machines.

While plastic parts are identical with the previous model, the decal sheet is different and offers two French planes in their natural-metal finish with colourful fuselage stripes and two German planes, one of them also in the NMF and the other in a three-tone camouflage. There is also a set of stencils on the decal sheet.
